Being an American

By John H. Vargo, Publisher, Author,
Speaker, Inventor

With all the lunacy that surrounds us, influenced by unique new forms of media, each forcing their own view points, some subtly, many in ways that most people do not understand, upon our lives, it is still a wonderful country, with every ability to “get ahead” that always existed.

Catch your breath, look around you, whether you are young or old, if you focus on the good old fashion traditions that built this country, you will suddenly realize that many, many people, young, old and in between, are “making it!”

It seems to me, that most of these people are working so hard, doing everything they can to build good and successful families, or lives that are meaningful to themselves as well as others, that you never hear a word of doubt, no negatives, just a quite noise of success as they

Continue to take advantage of all the advantages that American citizenship has to offer.

You see it most often from new immigrants that worked hard to gain U. S. Citizenship, some for ten years or more, before taking the pledge.

Despite all the rhetoric to the contrary, U. S. citizens, newly minted, are growing. Look around see how many are belly aching or crying about their lives, my guess is you will find not many, 99% are quietly proud to have become American citizens.

We can get through anything if you use the good old American “can do” spirt.
